Market Commentary

Portfolios

In the second quarter of 2021, global equities extended their strong run, with most major equity markets posting positive returns. The Covid-19 vaccination roll-out across the developed world has continued with relative success, particularly in countries like the USA and the UK, although the emergence of new strains such as the delta variant has proved problematic. Data would suggest, however, that despite an increase in the rate of infection, there does not appear to be a material increase in the number of deaths or hospitalisations attributable to Covid-19. Some governments, including in the UK, have seen this as sufficient evidence of the efficacy of the measures deployed to fight the virus to begin opening up their economies once more. Fiscal and monetary support remain in place and are unlikely to be removed in the short-term to ensure that the economic recovery is sufficiently robust.

Inflation expectations continue to be a key driver of returns across a range of markets. Investors are looking to understand whether the recent return of inflation is a long-term trend or merely a transitory consequence of the significant disruption to global supply chains and economic fallout resulting from the pandemic. It would appear conviction in the former is beginning to wane, and the value investment style lagged growth and quality during the second quarter. Currency movements continue to exhibit volatility with the US dollar strengthening markedly against sterling during the quarter before reversing the shift and ending the period slightly down. Sterling weakened against the euro and a basket of emerging currencies, enhancing returns from these regions for UK-based investors.

The UK equity market delivered another quarter of positive returns but underperformed the US and Europe. Growth and quality outperformed value and higher yielding stocks by a significant margin. Smaller companies performed better than mid-caps, with large caps achieving a return broadly in line with the wider market.

The US market led major equity indices over the quarter, producing a strong return following significant outperformance from large cap growth stocks. Small cap companies bucked the general trend as value slightly outperformed growth at this end of the market cap spectrum. There were generally positive returns in most Asia Pacific and emerging market countries, but headline returns for the regions were muted due to weak performance from the Chinese market, which makes up a large proportion of the regional indices. The main Japanese market was one of the few to finish the quarter in negative territory for sterling-investors, impacted by the underperformance of growth relative to value as well as a slightly weaker yen.

In a reversal of quarter one, most major fixed income indices achieved a positive return in the second quarter. UK index-linked gilts were the top performers, although this was not enough to fully offset losses in the year to date. Conventional gilts also delivered positive returns, particularly at the long end of the yield curve where changes in long-term interest rate expectations have a more pronounced effect. Emerging market debt was the next best performer, in sharp contrast to the previous quarter. Global high yield and inflation linked bonds typically outperformed investment grade and global government bonds. Short dated US Treasuries and Treasury Bills struggled to make headway.

In other asset classes, UK commercial property returns were marginally positive, as cautious optimism began to return to a sector which has seen significant headwinds since the pandemic began. Globally, property securities continued to perform strongly, being lifted alongside equity markets more broadly, with the US and Europe producing the strongest returns. Asia excluding Japan was the exception, with a negative return for sterling-based investors for the quarter. The oil price continues to rise unabated, a little over a year since the price turned negative in some markets. Gold and silver arrested their recent slide with returns returning to positive territory.
